New Outside Agency Funding transparency webpage launched

It's now easier for the public to track Outside Agency funding, which is allocated by the Board of Supervisors. A new webpage consolidates and expands information to the public about the County's allocation of general funds to nonprofit agencies that support human services and employment needs, and fuel economic growth via local attractions, cultural and recreational programs.

Leaders eye Pima County's economic future at workforce summit

More than 250 people, representing a diversity of Southern Arizona's employers, governments, and learning institutions, gathered at the University of Arizona Tech Park for a "workforce summit" hosted by Pima County. Among the groups represented were 38 job-training providers and 12 local chambers of commerce. The event featured a "State of the Workforce” luncheon, with a keynote address from Pima County Board of Supervisors Chair Adelita Grijalva.

Small Business Awards honor constructors, caregivers, and a coffee shop

Also at its March 21 meeting, the Board of Supervisors handed out the 2022 Small Business Awards. The Pima County Small Business Commission selected a winner in each of three categories: a nonprofit, a rural business, and an urban business. The winners, respectively, were Arizona Construction Trades, an advocacy group for local contractors; Crema Coffee, a Marana coffee shop; and Catalina In-Home Services, an in-home care provider.

Supervisor Katie Dusenberry honored for a lifetime of service

The Pima County Board of Supervisors, in honor of Women’s History Month, declared March 21, 2023, to be “Katie Dusenberry Day” at its meeting that same day. Dusenberry served on the Board of Supervisors from 1976 until 1984, the first woman to do so. Supervisor Rex Scott presented the proclamation to Dusenberry and her children, Bruce Dusenberry and Janel Dusenberry Lloyd. Dusenberry has served on numerous community boards and committees over six decades.
